Directions: Find all of the errors in the paragraph below.

As several school districts have found, moving the start time for high schools to later in the morning has several beneficial effects. One result is better school attendance. When seven Minneapolis high schools pushed back their start times, attendance in all grades improved, and academic performance improved slightly. Another positive effect is happier students and parents. When students get more sleep, they tend to be in a better mood, which improves relationships with their family members. A third important outcome is an improvement in safety. When unsupervised teens get out of school later in the afternoon, they have less time to get into trouble before adults get home. Plus, they are (they're) less prone to fatigue-related car accidents on their way to school in the morning.
